

Lake City

Name: Lake City School
 Location: 28th Avenue NE & (N)E
 125th Street
 Building: 2-room wood
 Architect: n.a.
 Site: n.a.

1914: Opened in January
 1919: Addition (n.a.)
 1931: Closed
 1944: Became part of Shoreline
 School District
 1952–53: Used as annex to new building
 1954: Annexed into Seattle School
 District
 1958: Sold to City of Seattle
 n.a.: Demolished
 Present: Site of Lake City Branch of Seattle Public Library

The community of Lake City developed along the state highway running from Seattle through Bothell to Monroe. Early Lake City found itself divided between three school districts: Maple Leaf, Oak Lake, and Lake Forest Park. Lake City School District No. 180 was created from parts of those districts in summer 1912. That fall the first Lake City School opened for 12 pupils in a house donated by H.L. Hilman at 37th Avenue NE and NE 123rd Street.

During the first school year, property was purchased as a permanent site. The following year the school operated temporarily (September-December) in a camp store owned by Mr. C.T. Chittenden while the new school was being completed. The new school opened after Christmas vacation in January 1914.

Two trees were planted in front of the school on Arbor Day of 1919 in memory of two young neighborhood men who lost their lives, one in a sawmill accident and the other in World War I. The trees remained there as late as 1961. Also in 1919, two classrooms were added to the building.

In 1931, a new Georgian-style Lake City School was opened on a site across the street and about a block away from the old school. As the school population continued to grow, a four-room addition was made in 1939. Another three classrooms were added in 1943.

The population of the Lake City area grew still more following World War II. This growth meant a triple-shift for kindergarten classes and double-shifts for the primary grades at Lake City School, which was then in Shoreline School District No. 412. With the opening of Jane Addams Junior High School in September 1949, Lake City became a K–6 school. Enrollment peaked at Lake City School in 1952–53 with 1,144 pupils. Some classes met in the old Lake City School building. With the opening of Pinehurst in 1950, followed by Rogers, Northgate, and Olympic Hills, some pressure was lifted.

Lake City, 1958 SPSA 240-363

Lake City, ca. 1935 SPSA 240-334

Name: Lake City School
 Location: 2611 NE 125th Street
 Building: Wood and brick veneer
 Architect: n.a.
 Site: 5.57 acres

1931: Opened
 1939: Addition (n.a.)
 1943: Addition (n.a.)
 1944: Became part of Shoreline School District
 1954: Annexed into Seattle School District
 1981: Closed in June; short-term lease to local citizens' group
 1985: Former playground sold to Seattle Parks Department
 1986: Long-term lease
 1987: Building remodeled
 Present: Lake City Professional Center

New schools were still needed, however, even after Lake City School was annexed into Seattle Public Schools. Cedar Park opened in 1956 as an annex to Lake City for grades 1–3. This expansion of schools, combined with a dropping birthrate and changing demographics in the neighborhood, resulted in a decline in enrollment at Lake City to about 550 in 1961 and 370 in 1974. With fewer classes in 1972–73, Lake City was able to combine two classrooms to make room for a model math lab, the first in the city.

In 1969, the number of minority students enrolled at Lake City School rose with the advent of busing. In 1970, the Jackson Park Housing Project opened to the west of Lake City and more minorities began moving into existing Lake City houses and apartments. By 1975, Lake City School had desegregated “naturally.” Lake City was paired with King in 1974–75 as part of a federal program to increase contact between school-age children of different backgrounds.

Lake City School closed in June 1981. Following a 50-year lease, the building was extensively remodeled by a developer in 1987 and transformed into a professional office building. The original school entrance was preserved and two large entry structures of the same style were added to either side of the old gym.

Lake City, 1955 SPSA 240-1