In 1910, the area that would become View Ridge was still old-growth forest. In the early 1930s, only a few farms dotted the undeveloped land above the Sand Point Naval Air Station. In 1936, two former radio station workers bought the hill between Wedgwood to the west and Hawthorn Hills to the south and settled there. At first, growth was slow, but soon began to accelerate after the area was annexed into the City of Seattle in the mid-1940s.

Children from the View Ridge area were bused to Bryant School. When Bryant became overcrowded, a search began for a school site in View Ridge. A plot of state-owned land, part of which was being used as a ballfield, was selected.

When View Ridge School opened, children were able to walk to school, rather than take the bus. The school began with four portable classrooms for grades K-3 during the 1944-45 school year. In February 1945, two more portables were added, along with the 4th grade. The following September two more portables and the 5th grade were added. By fall 1946, the site contained 12 portables for grades K-6.

A permanent school was constructed on the same site. The Seattle Times proclaimed it the “latest in design,” “completely modern” with “trim lines and rows of high windows.” The Seattle Post-Intelligencer called it “stream-lined” because all the classes were on one floor, and window space was maximized. Each room was originally painted in special colors selected for its exposure. South-facing rooms were blue-green and gray-green. Halls were painted chartreuse, and northern rooms painted dusty-rose for warmth. The kindergarten was painted apricot, mostly because the architect thought the children would like it.

The population of View Ridge increased so rapidly while the school was being built that by opening day, it could not accommodate all the children of the area. During fall 1948, when the school held only grades K-7, two portables were already required. The next year the school was expanded to include 8th grade. By 1950, enrollment reached 765 and six portables were in use. Six sessions of kindergarten were held, and 6th grade classes were housed in classrooms at Eckstein.

A 1951 addition provided six more classrooms. Even that was not enough. In 1952-53, the 7th and 8th grades were shifted to Eckstein, but enrollment continued to grow until it peaked at 1,206 in 1957-58. In fall 1960, a new classroom wing opened. The 1,123 students filled not only the new total of 26 regular classrooms, but nine portables as well. Decatur School opened in 1961-62 to help relieve this overcrowding, and View Ridge enrollment dropped to 822. By 1969-70, it was down to 660.

View Ridge's 6th grade classes were transferred to Eckstein Middle School beginning with the 1971-72 school year. Moving into the vacated classrooms were 31 profoundly deaf children with six teachers and three assistants. This program used the new American Sign Language. Two years later the program expanded to serve 66 children, while the regular school enrolled 350 students. In 1976-77, a class of deaf-blind students was added. After Sand Point School closed in June 1988, its Deaf and Hard-of-Hearing program was moved to View Ridge.

View Ridge continued as a host school for hearing-impaired students until 2006, when the program relocated to TOPS. The entire school adopted the Comer School model in which staff work to give students opportunities for leadership.

In 2015, a project to upgrade View Ridge's playfield was completed. A new running track was installed around the perimeter of the field, a t-ball field was created, and an ADA ramp was added to connect the upper and lower fields.
