

Enrollment Study Survey Findings

Representative Survey Of Adults With School-Aged Children in the Seattle Public Schools District, Washington

January 2025

Survey Methodology – Sample Population

The overall sample consists of 1,420 adults (e.g., caretakers) of school-aged children, as of 2024, within Seattle Public Schools (SPS) district boundaries.

This overall sample is representative of adults of school-aged children and includes additional representative sub-samples by geography and race/ethnicity of 300 interviews with adults of former SPS students (21%) and 1,015 interviews with adults of current SPS students (71%). These sub-groups by student enrollment status were weighed to be proportionally representative of how much each group makes up of the adult population. This proportional distribution was calculated in collaboration with SPS staff and Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT) graduate researchers.

There is an additional sub-sample of 105 interviews with adults of students who have never attended the SPS system (8%) – this sub-sample by itself is descriptive and non-representative. This study is made up of concentric circles of survey populations. Certain metrics, derived from a combination of SPS household data and proprietary L2 data, were tracked and evaluated during all phases and weighed to be representative after data collection.

AREAS FOR EXPLORATION

- ❑ Focus on engagement with early learners, meaning caretakers of pre-K students as well as Pre-K and childcare partners, to increase the percentage of children who enroll in Seattle Public Schools for kindergarten and beyond.
- ❑ Engagement with the SPS community around curriculum and instruction.
- ❑ Finding “unaccounted for” students and reengaging them (Dee, 2023).
- ❑ Creating a task force which includes students, families, and community members for specific groups of students of color and why they leave SPS at higher rates
- ❑ Continuing to partner with city agencies to share data to support planning for affordable housing for families
